Description on the Course

This short course is designed for graduate students and researchers from universities and those who involve in research related activities across Sri Lanka, a unique venue to learn cutting-edge methods in research. This is specially aiming at providing the necessary knowledge and skills to carry out any type of research project (small-scale or large-scale research projects) by improving abilities in several key areas of research, enabling the participants to develop an advanced understanding of various research methods, data analyses and presentation styles.

By the end of this course,

The participants in this programme will be able to use relevant quantitative and qualitative methodologies when writing-up the research project (either dissertation/thesis/or research report) and apply various analytical techniques during the research process as well as developing proposals for research funding.

The programme consists of a variety of advanced modules, which place the different qualitative and quantitative data analysis techniques within broader disciplinary trends towards mixed-methods research designs. Special focus will be placed upon developing critical thinking, which is an essential part of a critical research consumer too.
